Social skills classes and parenting classes are among new treatment options offered by the CPD’s Clinical Service division for children on the autism spectrum and their parents.

The social skills classes for children in the age 5-12 range who have some verbal skills and can hold a conversation in a rudimentary way, said Exemplary Services director Sue Olsen. These children often fall into a service “black hole.”

“They learn to initiate conversations in small groups,” Olsen said. “Jackie and Amy go with them to support them in practicing their skills or correcting behavior.”

A five-session punch card costs $60 and is good for two months, said Olsen. There are 15 to 20 opportunities to attend small group sessions or activities during that time frame. Individual sessions cost $15 each.

A parent education class called The ABCs of Behavior is being led by Up to 3 clinician Janel Preston. Parents receive a workbook and other reading materials and also complete homework assignments. Each lesson could stand alone, Olsen said, but they do build on each other.

In March or April, Olsen said, the goals is to start sessions for children who are non-verbal or don’t have conversation-level skills.
