Marilyn Hammond

Marilyn Hammond has been named the interim director of the Interdisciplinary Training Division at Utah State University's Center for Persons with Disabilities. She replaces Judith Holt, who is currently serving as the CPD's interim director. The appointment became official on Oct. 1

"I have big shoes to fill," Hammond said. "Judith is an amazing director. She has done a great job with the division. We have an excellent staff and great programs. This new role will be challenging, but exciting."

Hammond's new duties will include managing multiple projects, seeking new funding, collaborating with other departments and colleges, and keeping current programs and services running effectively. In addition, the Utah Assistive Technology Program will now be located in the IDT division. Hammond is the current director of the Utah Assistive Technology Foundation, which provides low-interest financing for individuals in need of AT.
